Save 25%-50% off the cost of college.

Several non-profit organizations offer college credit by exam, allowing students to test out of a significant number of college courses at most universities, reducing the cost of college by up to 50%. Most colleges require students to take two years of general education classes, such as US History, Economics, Biology, Spanish, and Calculus. Many students can use the knowledge they acquired in high school, along with an intense study of a college level textbook, to test out of the college course.

According to the College Board, the average cost to attend an in-state public university is $22,000 per year for tuition, fees, and room & board. The cost to test out of one year of college is between $400-$1200. Testing out of five courses during each summer prior to a student's freshman and sophomore years of college will allow the student to graduate in three years and save 25% off the cost of college. Delaying entry to college by six months will allow the student to test out of fifteen to twenty courses, depending on their university's test out exam policy. Graduating from college in 3 years looks great on a resume. The self-motivation, dedication, and intelligence demonstrated by taking the initiative to graduate early and save money will set the student apart from other graduates.

Free college textbooks

Our website offers links to free college textbooks to help students study for the test out exams.

Free high school textbooks

Since most high schools don't allow students to take textbooks home for the summer, we offer links to free high school textbooks so that high school students can pre-study for their upcoming classes during the summer and winter breaks. Pre-studying should lead to better grades, which should mean better college options and more scholarship money.

Free Audio Recordings of Textbooks

We also offer free audio recordings of textbooks for those students who don't like to read, have trouble reading for extended periods of time, or have Dyslexia or ADHD. Students can listen when they wake up in the morning, before they go to bed at night, or while taking a walk. Also, parents can get involved! With the recordings of the textbooks, the entire family can listen together at night instead of watching TV. Now parents really can be involved with their child's education.

Scholarships

We are in the process of setting up scholarships to cover the cost of testing out of college courses for financially needy students.
